Ruairi MacNamara is a research scientist at Hubbs-SeaWorld Research Institute, where he works on stocking of alternative marine species as part of the Dick Laub Fisheries Replenishment Program. This new initiative by HSWRI parallels the long-standing white seabass program, and current research efforts are focused on developing tools for stock enhancement of California halibut. Prior to joining HSWRI in 2015, Ruairi spent two years as a fisheries biologist at Southern Illinois University. He is a graduate of the National University of Ireland, with a BS in Marine Science and PhD in Fisheries Ecology.
